THIS IS UNEVALUATED INFORMATION

1. During the second half of 1951, Soviet Air Force authorities in the Far East will supply 500 modern fighters to the Chinese Communists. In July the first batch, consisting of 100 YAK fighters, was delivered to the Chinese Communists in Harbin. By the end of September, 100 MIG jet fighters will be ready for delivery to the Chinese Communist Air Force.
2. At a Mukden Conference the Sino-Soviet Air Force Combined Headquarters (中蘇空軍聯合指揮部) decided to enlarge ten airfields in China into modern Soviet-style air bases. The Soviets will send 2,000 technicians and ground personnel with tools and machinery to these airfields to expedite construction; the major part of the work is to be completed before the end of 1951. The ten airfields are at Harbin, Chiamussu, Mukden, Kalgan, Lanchow, Tsingtao, K'unming, Hsuehou, Hankow, and Nanning. Large Soviet air forces would be transferred to these bases in the event of war.
